Dear Christodoulos,

Thank you for your letter and for your interest in being published by xxxxx. Of course I remember our session in xxxxx.

I have not started to read your submission. We may have a problem – as you'll see from our notes we can only (at this time at least) consider work by Irish authors. I hope this will change – but I need to ask you to clarify/confirm your nationality. I look forward to hearing from you.

Best wishes,

Sincerely,

I would have been a completely different person without the politics and a completely different writer.

Would a person have been different completely without the politics, and I, a writer, completely different?

Have I been completely a different writer without the politics? And would a different person completely?

Been completely different without the writer. Would I have a different politics completely? And person A?

A different person would have been completely without the writer, a different "I" politics (completely), and...

Completely a different person have I been; and the writer would – without a completely different politics.

Different politics completely would have a completely different writer. And I been a person without "the".

Person A would have been completely different: a writer. The politics different completely. And I without!

Without a completely different politics, the writer and I would have been completely a different person.

The different "I" politics, completely without a person and a writer, would have been completely different.

Politics would have been completely different without a writer and the "I" – a different person completely.

And, without politics, the person would have been completely different. I a different writer completely? A!

A different politics without the writer. Completely. And completely a different person, I would have been.

Completely been a different person. And I completely without the politics! Would a different writer have?

Different I have been. Completely. A different person. And, completely without the politics, a writer would.

Writer: without a politics, the person would have been a completely different... Different, completely! And I?
