Purpose: Foodborne illness outbreak among attendees of the Good Vibe Tribe Luau

Hi friends,

It's been brought to our attention that several guests at the Luau on July 3rd at Golden Gardens got sick after the event, and have been diagnosed with Salmonella. We're working closely with Public Health -- Seattle & King County to figure out what happened and identify whether potentially contaminated foods were served at the event.

If you or a family member attended this event, even if you did not get ill, please take a few minutes to complete the following survey. Comparing food histories between those who became ill and those who did not can help determine what might have caused illness and prevent others from becoming sick. Click here to access the survey.

If you are currently ill please contact your health care provider to discuss testing and treatment options. The typical incubation period (time between exposure to the bacteria and symptom onset) for Salmonella is 1-5 days, so if you attended the event and have not yet developed symptoms, it is unlikely you will become ill.

Our number one concern is the health and safety of our friends and the community. We're making every effort to be transparent and proactive to help determine exactly what happened and will share more information as it becomes available.

Thank you,

-Good Vibe Tribe
