The Creative Tuba and Euphonium in 2014: A Discussion
Dr. Andrew Larson

"This presentation will feature a panel of professional tuba and euphonium players who will discuss together what it means to be a professional artist and creative musician in 2014. Dr. Larson will present some context for the conversation and give prompt questions to the panel members. As the panel discusses their answers, the audience is encouraged to chime in and ask questions or present their experiences as part of the conversation. The goal of this presentation is to help tuba and euphonium players from around the world 1) realize that we have more potential than we might think we do, 2) serve as a springboard for other creative ideas and 3) serve as a catalyst for others to hopefully think in a different and more creative manner."

Prototype and Reference Models from the Holton Factory Reference Collection at the National Music Museum
Kenneth Drobnak

"In 2008, Conn-Selmer Inc. closed facilities in both Elkhorn and Kenosha, Wisconsin. The company contacted the National Music Museum in Vermillion, South Dakota and donated over 350 instruments to the museum, along with boxes of technical drawings, contracts, memorandums, scrapbooks, photos and other historical artifacts. This presentation will discuss the most unusual models in the low brass collection, including a 1930s short-action recording bass, a 1960s GG Bugle in the shape of a sousaphone with a piston valve and rotary valve, and also a 1950s era BB-flat upright tuba with a tuning slide lever."

“Getting Your First College Teaching Job” Panel Discussion

Dr. Mark Nelson, Pima Community College

Dr. Roy Couch, Bluffton University

Dr. Alex Lapins, Northern Arizona University

Dr. Kevin Sanders, University of Memphis

Dr. Kelly Thomas, University of Arizona

Dr. Jerry Young, University of Wisconsin, Eau Claire

“For many graduate students and members of our euphonium and tuba community, getting the first college job whether right out of graduate school or after being employed in a number of other ways can be a daunting task. This panel discussion is centered about the growing trend of having additional skills and experience beyond euphonium and tuba teaching and performing abilities. Each member of the panel became experts in multiple music subjects as a gateway into their college positions. The format of the panel discussion is for each member to relate part of their teaching career to what additional knowledge and skills helped them become employed, a general discussion about how one prepares to enter the college teaching job market, and a summary of what works and does not work.”

Composing and Arranging for Tuba and Euphonium
Jemmie Robertson and Todd French

"The aim of this clinic is to identify great literature that is both accessible and appropriate for young tuba and euphonium players. This clinic will also address the benefits of solo playing for young players. The Eastern Illinois University Low Brass Faculty will discuss and perform excerpts from a variety of solo literature for tuba and euphonium, highlighting lesser known, more approachable works of a high musical quality that tend to be overlooked within our repertoire. Furthermore, this clinic identifies literature that spans three broadly defined levels with each level offering an appropriate musical challenge for the young tuba/euphonium player so that they can develop in the following areas: Technical skills, Expressive skills and musicianship, . . . Musical understanding"

Tuba Challenges Solved

- No more coping with tuba weight while playing
- Mobility: in transport & with tuba on stand
- Accommodates multiple age groups so kids can start playing younger
- Practical & strong, yet attractive for concert settings
- Quick, easy set up and take down
- Adjustability to fit any size tuba
- Safeguards against tuba damage
