演題：“Health and Communication Inequalities in the 21st Century: Observations from the Field.” (簡易逐次通訳有り)

紹介： The tremendous developments in information and communication technologies in the 21st century offer unprecedented opportunities to translate and communicate health information to different publics. Yet evidence shows that not all groups are able to take advantage of this communication revolution and the fruits of this revolution are benefiting disproportionately those who are already well-off increasing health and communication inequalities. This talk will provide evidence for this argument and offer some exemplar interventions at individual and community level that will demonstrate that such inequalities can be mitigated.
