

expatparent

the really useful magazine

School news

Written by Expat Parent June 5, 2016 – Reprinted with Permission

All systems go for new Brit school

The foundations have been laid for Malvern College, the latest British school to arrive in Hong Kong. Originally founded in Worcestershire, UK, in 1865, the school ranks within the top 5% of UK schools. Malvern's Hong Kong-based independent, co-educational day school aims to eventually provide 960 spaces for primary and secondary students. It will use the International Baccalaureate as its backbone curriculum, along with a broad co-curriculum focusing on sport, drama and the arts.

Laying the first stone – representatives from Malvern College and the Hong Kong government take part at the official ceremony.

The school will be placing special emphasis on Chinese, developing a tailored Mandarin curriculum in conjunction with Beijing Normal University. There will be further exchange opportunities for students with Malvern's sister schools in Qingdao and Chengdu. Malvern also aims to be the first school in Hong Kong to introduce the Forest School curriculum, where students are encouraged to interact and learn from nature. The school will be located adjacent to Hong Kong Science Park in Tai Po, New Territories, and hopes to open its doors to students in September 2018. The admissions process begins this coming September. For more details, malverncollege.org.hk

Entrance of Malvern College